These lively St. Mary's cheerleader Rattlers made it into national competition this year, just like our volleyball and men's and women's basketball. It was the squad's first appearance in national competition.

For a year or two the squad has been a regular St. Mary's athletics team, rising in status from being a student club.

And genuine athletes they are, keeping strong and agile at vigorous two-hour practice sessions three times a week.

Photo inset in the top left corner shows cheerleaders of past years...maybe the fifties? Perhaps someone will write in and tell us who they are and when the picture was taken. ■

We've just about finished the annual round of recruitment receptions for prospective new students, with stops in St. Louis, Laredo, McAllen, Corpus Christi, El Paso, Dallas-Fort Worth, Houston, Austin and San Antonio.

I thought you might be interested in some very unsystematic reflections on what today's prospective and current students at St. Mary's are like.

We read so much about the problems young people face and the problems they cause. Young folks themselves are very aware of these problems. They are growing up in a difficult world, in a culture burdened by violence, drugs, sex, family instability and unstable values. More of our students than formerly are coming from single-parent homes and from public high schools. Many more than a generation ago are coming to university very conscious of the economic pressures of the times and, while youthfully optimistic, they are also much more cautious about their own economic future.

But although they have grown up in a culture shaped by drugs, sex, and rock and roll, students interested in St. Mary's are looking for a whole lot more than that. They tell us they choose St. Mary's because they are very serious about their education and they see St. Mary's as a place where education is the priority. It's not a "party school" image that attracts them, but the spirit of community and friendliness of the St. Mary's family.

Many students and their families ask about our Campus Ministry and campus Masses—there are still two daily and three on Sunday—and the presence of religious and priests on campus. I know from my own students' reflection papers how important religious and moral questions are for them. Many have not had the systematic religious training of Catholic schools before, but they come with open minds and seeking direction. Fortunately, St. Mary's students still tend to come from solid families who care about their children's lives, faith and values.

Such students care deeply about their world, even as they are still learning how it works. Many of them have already had community service experience and are looking for more. They can still be surprised at how different some people's lives are from their own, and they are deeply committed to helping equality for all human beings become more than just a dream. They're just not sure how this can be accomplished.

It's not easy to be a young person today. I for one would not trade places with next year's freshmen (born in 1978!). But our students continue the St. Mary's tradition of looking for a better life, equipped for challenges with not only a sound education but also with the pondered faith and examined values they will need to make a living and make a difference. ■

About This Issue

Most of us can remember a very tough teacher we thought at the time worked us to death. But now we know that was just the one who instilled in us our abiding love of literature, or of art, or of math, or of sciences...whatever. Such a teacher, Sister Semel, is profiled on p. 3, and as proof of her excellence, by one of her own former students who became a writer.

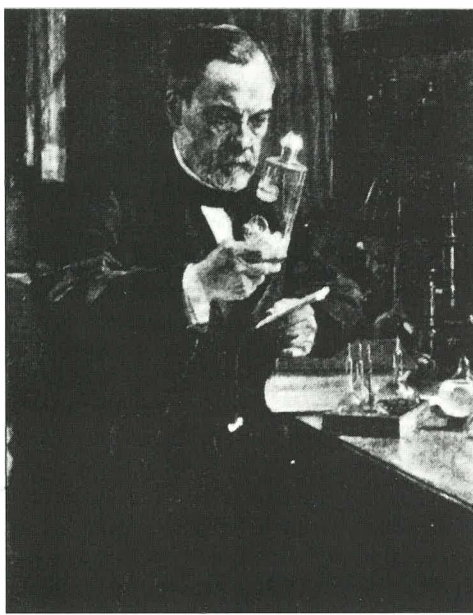

On p. 6, political science Professor Tom Hoffman gives us a moving account of how tolerance for Native Americans' beliefs led a Catholic intellectual to re-evaluate his own traditions.

The kind of work that brings daily danger is the choice of three of our alums, profiled on p.8. And isn't it gratifying to know that St. Mary's provided them with a strong foundation they value highly.

Brother Hanson's essay commemorating the 100th anniversary of the death of Louis Pasteur on p. 2 probably tells us things we didn't know (or remember) about the great scientist, i.e. he was a 19th century Catholic with an abiding faith and a spirit that overcame great family sadness.

Remarkably, the 100th anniversary of the death of Louis Pasteur, born Dec. 27, 1822, died Sept. 28, 1895, went almost unnoticed, yet his name will forever be synonymous with extraordinary advances in medicine.

Louis Pasteur's germ theory revolutionized the treatment of diseases and the practice of medicine. His labors opened and enriched many fields, such as the structure of the chemical molecule, the mechanism of fermentation and the role played by bacteria and microorganisms. Through his experimentation, vaccines were developed to immunize humans and animals against diseases such as rabies, smallpox, tuberculosis, typhoid, cholera and anthrax.

Pasteurization

In his laboratory, Pasteur studied fermentation by heating processes to avoid spoilage of wine, beer, milk and other foods— giving us understanding of the need to “pasteurize.”

And from this brilliant scientist we learned that medical and scientific people must meticulously wash their hands and sterilize their instruments— indeed, that all of us should wash our hands regularly. His dedication also restored the silk, poultry and other industries devastated by microbes.

Pasteur was a fervent Catholic and defender of Catholic teachings. He could not understand the failure of some scientists to recognize the existence of the Creator. Believing a life of reason was not enough, he wrote: “Who on his deathbed does not hear an inner voice assuring him that the soul is immortal. To say death is the end of all is to insult the human heart.”

Laboratory as Temple

Pasteur worshiped experimentation as the oracle which would reveal the universal laws of the physical world. Lending his talents to the art of healing, he regarded his laboratory as a sacred temple, a unique place of work isolated from the outside world, analogous to a monastery, where God's work must be done in silence and seriousness. He found it miraculous that from a humble potato can come sugar, alcohol, ether and vinegar.

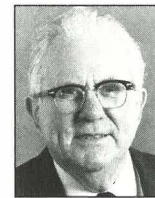

The order and cleanliness of Pasteur's laboratory and his concept of experimentation became the model for modern research techniques.

Relentless Worker

Though at age 45 he suffered paralysis of half his body, Pasteur considered it “a bad deed to let a day go without working,” adding, “Let me tell you the secret which has led me to my goal. My only strength is my tenacity.”

Despite illness, primitive laboratory conditions and personal tragedy such as the deaths of three children at age two, six and 13, Pasteur worked relentlessly for mankind, a mission he believed God had assigned him. His advice to his students and lab assistants was: “When one is third, one must become second; when one is second, one must become first; and when one is first, one must remain first.”

Pasteur was buried with the pomp and ceremony accorded France's great national dignitaries. Inscribed on his tomb in the chapel of the Pasteur Institute in Paris are words that describe his life: “Faith, Hope, Charity and Science.” ■

Brother Janson's strong interest in and knowledge of history complements the practical side of his work as a math teacher.

PASTEUR

“If we want global peace, we must understand people who are different from us.”

Sister Ann Semel, S.S.N.D, Ph.D, is the type of professor students love to dread. They know when they walk into her classroom they’ll have to work hard—really hard. Yet this professor has the ability of getting students to like it.

A St. Mary’s professor of English since 1967 and currently chair of the English/communications department, Influenced by the strong family ties that characterize the Southern culture in which she grew up and the Southern literature she loves to teach, she makes the English and communications department her extended family.

Love for Japan

Another great love of Sister Ann’s is Japan, where she spent 10 weeks in 1994 and eight weeks in 1985 in a program sponsored by her religious order, the School Sisters of Notre Dame.

Of her first visit she says, “It was the conversion experience of my life. I grew up during World War II, so I felt a lot of guilt about the dropping of the atomic bomb. When I went to Hiroshima, the Japanese people not only forgave me, but they enabled me to forgive myself. That was a wonderful experience, one through which I wept a lot.”

With the help of the St. Mary’s President’s Peace Commission, she arranged for two Hiroshima survivors and one of her congregation’s Japanese sisters to visit St. Mary’s for a three-day program. “It was a powerful experience,” she recalls, “something you must experience to understand.”

Freely admitting she fell in love with Japan and its people, she believes part of her attraction is their culture, so different from that of the West, particularly the great respect the Japanese show for nature and one another.

“There’s a gentleness about the people that I really love,” she says.

She also loves the graciousness of the people, their curiosity about Westerners and their great respect for education.

A Professor Students Love to Dread

LOVING TEACHER – Junior Carol McLean, left, in a happy hug with Sister Semel, who not only gives her students a top-rate education, but also lots of love.

Sister Ann says: “I see myself not so much as a teacher, but as a lover. It’s important for my students to know that I love them. When they realize you love them, they want to do well for you—they want to learn—they want to live up to your expectations.”

High Expectations

And Sister Ann places high expectations on her students. “I want them to achieve the best they can because I love them. When I can convey that to my students, I succeed in becoming a better teacher.”

One way Sister Ann shows love for her students is by praying with them in class. “I open myself up in meditative prayer, which was scary at first because it’s so risky,” she says. “But it allows me to affect my students in a different way.”

It’s not uncommon for English students and faculty to gather at the home of Sister Ann, a New Orleans native, for an evening of socializing over her famous red beans and rice.

by Julie Rohmer (B.A. '92), Assistant Director of Alumni Relations

“St. Mary’s and I are proud that we started expanding American literature 20 years ago. Today, we’re 20 years ahead of many universities.”

Media Portrayal

Along with her love for Japan is anger at the American media’s portrayal of the country. “They give a largely political and economic view—how we compete with Japan in trade—Japanese cars versus ours, that sort of thing,” she says. “Somehow the whole concept of the Japanese people and their culture is lost.”

“If we want global peace, we must understand people who are different from us. The Pacific Rim is gaining power. If we don’t want increasing struggles with the people of that area, we must try to understand them, and we certainly don’t get that understanding through the media.”

Believing that one person can make a big difference, Sister Ann decided that her best hope of creating change would be to teach a course in Japanese literature.

“We can learn so much about a people through their literature and their art,” she explains. “So I arranged with our sisters in Japan that I’d study Japanese literature—in translation of course.”

Her Japanese fiction course features “The Sunken Temple,” a novel by Kizaki, a woman writer with whom she had the pleasure of spending a day. She hopes the author will eventually visit St. Mary’s.

International Courses

“We’re trying to internationalize our English courses,” she explains. “For example, we’ve incorporated Russian, French, Chinese and Indian authors into a short-story course. We also require a three-hour course in international topics such as Japanese literature or the literature of Central and South America.”

Sister Ann’s course in minority literature in the ’70s led the way for the English department’s expanded coverage of minority authors, particularly in the course that surveys American literature.

Concerned that students of English were not exposed to the works of talented minority writers, she developed courses in African American, Mexican American and Native American literature.

Textbooks that included minority writers were not then available, so Sister Ann and St. Mary’s persuaded the McMillan Publishing Co. to develop a new “Survey of American Literature” text. The company eventually published the new text and chose Sister Ann as one of the editors.

“St. Mary’s and I are proud that we started expanding American literature 20 years ago,” she says. “Today, we’re 20 years ahead of many universities.”

At the same time, Sister Ann was also busy expanding the role of the English department.

“In the 1970s,” she recalls, “the number of students majoring in humanities declined because the teaching profession, the field most available to humanities majors, was overcrowded.”

Communication Degrees

“I tried to design something to help students of English and literature become better writers, analyzers and synthesizers, and at the same time, acquire skills that were more career-oriented,” Sister Ann explains. “The idea came from the desire to keep the English degree alive—to enable students to pursue their love for English and also learn skills needed to get a job.” The result was undergraduate and graduate degrees that include courses in journalism, media, photography, business communications, graphics and internships.

Thanks to Sister Ann’s drive, the programs are alive and well. “We’re geared toward preparing our students for the world in which we work and live,” she says. “That’s what St. Mary’s is all about, and that’s what I’m about.” ■

Julie Rohmer (B.A. '92) recently joined the St. Mary's Alumni Relations Office after three and a half years as a writer for Today's Catholic newspaper published by the Archdiocese of San Antonio.

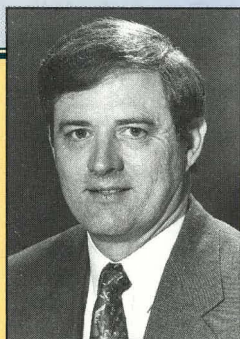

A few moments of prayer is how Sister Ann likes to begin her classes — helping students, most of whom have hectic schedules, to meditate quietly for a few minutes and calm themselves to concentrate on her high standard of work.

Thoughts from the Past President

OF THE ST. MARY'S UNIVERSITY ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

by Patrick Klasing (B.B.A. '71)

I recently had the pleasure of attending an alumni reception in El Paso — a reception that was different because El Paso alum Mike Dipp (B.A. '64, M.A. '67), hosted the event.

The way it happened was that Mike called our Alumni Relations Office to say it was time he gave something back to St. Mary's! His action is an example of the pride and enthusiasm we continue to see in our alumni. Whether in big cities such as Los Angeles, Chicago, New Orleans, etc., in a chapter city or any other city, alumni often want to get together to find ways to help St. Mary's. This close family loyalty, unique to St. Mary's, sets us apart from other schools.

Top-Rate Education

Close ties are not the only thing that should make us proud. The education we received and that students continue to receive at St. Mary's is second to none. Too often, we are reluctant to brag about the quality of our graduates. Outstanding doctors, lawyers, business men and women, teachers and citizens produced by our school have left a legacy throughout our country. But to continue providing a top-rate education, St. Mary's needs the help of its alumni.

Many Ways to Help

Consider the many ways you can help St. Mary's: For instance, for the last two years the St. Louis chapter has helped St. Mary's recruit students by sending 40 young people to the campus Sleeping Bag Weekend. Another example: Our Washington, D.C., chapter helps our students find valuable internships. All our alumni chapters help raise money for scholarships, and among the many activities San Antonio alumni are noted for is the army of volunteers that help stage St. Mary's annual Fiesta Oyster Bake on campus.

Contributions Needed

As individuals, each alumnus can help St. Mary's by contributing to the annual fund. Your contributions are extremely important in helping the necessary work of building facilities, providing equipment and hiring the best professors.

On behalf of the university's Alumni Association board of directors, I want to sign off on my year of immediate past president by thanking you for your support during the past year. ■

American Indian Spirituality Helped Open Up The Holy

by Thomas J. Hoffman, Ph.D.,
Chairman, Political Science Department

Charles Alexander Eastman retells the following story in his book, "The Soul of the Indian," published in 1911:

A missionary once undertook to instruct a group of Indians in the truths of his religion. He told them of the creation of the earth in six days and of the fall of our first parents by eating an apple.

The courteous savages listened attentively, and after thanking him, one related a very ancient tradition concerning the origin of maize. But the missionary plainly showed his disgust and disbelief, indignantly saying: "What I delivered to you were sacred truths, but this you tell me is mere fable and falsehood!"

"My brother," gravely replied the offended Indian, "It seems that you have not been well grounded in the rules of civility. You saw that we, who practice these rules, believed your stories. Why, then, do you refuse to credit ours?"

I first read that story in 1980 while in St. Louis, helping my mother relearn how to walk after her leg was amputated. I was doing a directed-readings course with Professor Tom Holm, a Cherokee-Creek Indian teaching American Indian policy studies at the University of Arizona. The course topic was Native American spirituality, and the focus was the Sioux religion as articulated by experts Black Elk and Charles Alexander Eastman. I was learning to believe other people's spiritual stories, or at least suspend disbelief.

Rethinking Spirituality

A number of gratuitous things came about for me by choosing to study at the University of Arizona in Tucson. Within a year of enrolling for my graduate program, noted Native American scholar Vine Deloria Jr. started the American Indian policy studies program in the department of political science. Even before his arrival I had become friends with his administrative assistant to be, a Colville Indian named Dan Brudevold. Also, soon after I arrived at the university, the sociology department hired well-known priest-author Andrew Greeley to teach the sociology of religion, a particular interest of mine. Thus the stage was set for my rethinking of spirituality within various cultures.

On the third floor of the Social Science Building I was surrounded by Indians. For no reason other than that they were my colleagues, I began to hang out with them. Just as Dr. Bob Thomas, a social scientist and Indian holy man, called some of his conferees "hang-around-the-fort" Indians, I guess I became a "hang-around-the-Indians" graduate student.

Suspending Disbelief

What gradually happened was not only my conscious choice to suspend disbelief when listening to others' spiritual experiences and stories, but also a desire to read about spiritual experiences new to me.

For example, one friend told me of his ability to feel the presence of people if they were spiritually "strong," and I accepted him at his word. Another spoke convincingly of healings he had witnessed through witnessed through native medicines and prayers. And I attended pow-wows, where people treated others with respect, and people “gained” by giving away.

Portion of a Navajo blanket woven by hand.

Ceremonial raven headgear.

Black Elk spoke of “walking” or “living in a sacred manner,” a condition to which I tried to become more attuned. I continued to read and study Native American spiritual life after graduating, and I gave presentations at the Western Social Science Convention almost every year.

Accepting Spirituality

Little by little, I began to realize that while I had willingly suspended disbelief in others’ spiritual stories, I had been unwilling to credit similar stories from my own Roman Catholic tradition. Perhaps my lifelong immersion in Western scientific rationalism had made it difficult to genuinely accept spirituality in my own background. True, I was deeply involved in my religion. True, I was a professed member in religious vows—a brother in the Society of Mary. But I had not let go of partial disbelief in my own traditions.

Gradually I began to open myself to the possibility that some of these traditions should be given credit. For instance, if I was willing to respect the Indian tradition of burning sweet grass and saying a blessing before eating, perhaps saying grace before meals was important. If the Indian way of passing a pipe to bless one another was appropriate, perhaps Catholic blessing with “holy” water and incense was not superstitious.

If it was a good thing for Indians to use the sweat lodge (the original sauna) and go on vision quests to seek spiritual knowledge, perhaps Christian meditation could lead to insights for the soul. If Indians could have visions, and the spirit of White Buffalo Calf Woman could appear at important ceremonies, why couldn’t Mary, the mother of Jesus, appear to children in Medjugorje?

If Indians receive insight, inspiration and protection from their spirit animals, isn’t it just as reasonable to believe that similar blessings can be received from angels? If Indians can sense power in certain people, could there not also be holy, sacred places with power for Catholics?

Mask worn during ceremonies to cure diseases.

Reclaiming Catholic Tradition

By listening and giving credit to others’ stories and experiences, I was able to reclaim some of my own Catholic tradition, including blessings, ceremony, holy water, meditation, sacred objects and places, angels, apparitions and visions.

I quote the words of Black Elk from his foreword to the book “The Sacred Pipe”:

“We should understand well that all things are the works of the Great Spirit. We should know that He is within all things—the trees, the grasses, the rivers, the mountains and all the four-legged animals and the winged peoples; and even more important, we should understand that He is also above all these things and peoples. When we understand all this deeply in our hearts, then we will fear and love and know the Great Spirit, and then we will be and act and live as He intends.” ■

Dr. Thomas J. Hoffman (B.A. '73), obtained an M.A. degree in 1979 and a Ph.D. in 1982 from the University of Arizona, the year he joined St. Mary's faculty.

Three Modern Musketeers

by Sylvia McLaren, editor

secret service agents in exciting but dangerous work.

We could call them the three musketeers, modern style. They're alums, they're buddies, they're highly trained to serve their country as Secret Service special agents in exciting but dangerous work.

Anthony Chapa (B.A. '75, M.A. '79), Victor Erevia (B.A. '82) and Anthony Martinez (B.A. '80) work throughout the world on what the Secret Service calls "Protective Assignments." That means they guard the president and former presidents and their families, vice presidents and their families, presidential candidates and visiting heads of states.

In the Line of Fire

Does it sound like Clint Eastwood in the movie, "In the Line of Fire"? It should, because that production was made in consultation with the Secret Service.

Planning and fulfilling exacting assignments takes the three all over the world. But it was the exhaustive preparations for Pope John Paul II's 1987 visit to San Antonio that brought these alums together.

Protecting VIPs is by no means their only work. Rigorously trained in firearms, surveillance, medical emergencies and undercover operations, they also track down counterfeiters, fraud and forgery suspects, drug traffickers and terrorists.

One of Vic Erevia's gratifying assignments led to the arrest and conviction of drug dealers manufacturing explosives and conspiring to murder a federal agent.

In a nutshell, they taught me that it's not only the final destination but also the journey that is important.

In another case, he played the role of a wealthy drug trafficker, Anthony Chapa doubled as his chauffeur, and Anthony Martinez was the arresting agent. The result: seizure of $77.2 million in counterfeit cashiers' checks.

Bilingual Hispanics

All three agents are bilingual Hispanics, enabling them to work throughout Latin America, including Colombia, which Erevia calls "the counterfeit capital of the world," and where Chapa confesses he experienced one of his scariest assignments.

Looking back at their education at St. Mary's with great appreciation, here's what they have to say:

Chapa: "St. Mary's began to prepare me for this career back in the early '70s. While still a student at Thomas Jefferson High School in San Antonio, I was in the Upward Bound program at St. Mary's, where I began to develop self-confidence and awareness of opportunities that a college education offers.

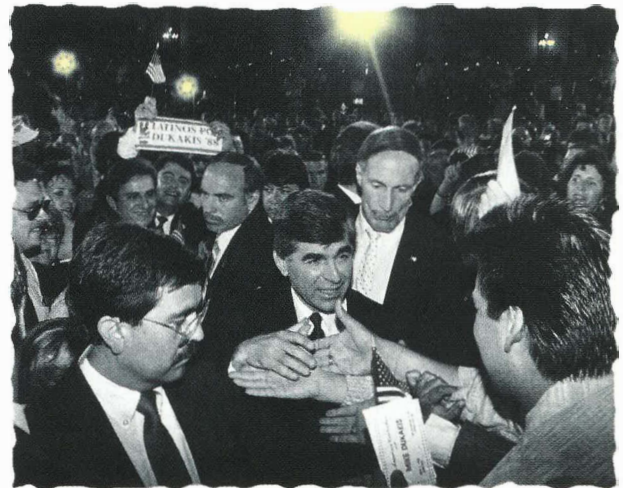

"Then, as a St. Mary's student, I was challenged by faculty members, and began to realize my potential for the first time.

"I'd always been interested in a career in law enforcement. Coupled with the St. Mary's spirit of constantly challenging one's self, this forced me to seek out the most challenging law enforcement career obtainable.

"Political science faculty members Dr. Bill Crane and Dr. Neftali Garcia constantly challenged and encouraged me to reach out for adventure. In a nutshell, they taught me that it's not only the final destination but also the journey that is important. And my career has been a 'trip' thus far."

Erevia: "In the fall of 1978, I transferred to St. Mary's University from Texas Southmost College in Brownsville. I was a member of the St. Mary's baseball team for the following two years. In June 1985, I married the former Lenora Reddoch

(B.A. '83). We now have two children, Ethan, 7, and Christian, 3.

"Growing up in South Texas, I never thought that being a U.S. Secret Service agent was an option.

The idea of being part of the service entrusted to protect the president of the United States and my country was overwhelming. I discovered, though, that I qualified physically, mentally and morally.

Agent Anthony Chapa, left, keeps an eye on the safety of then presidential candidate Gov. Michael Dukakis.

St. Mary's, the Gateway

"I believe that St. Mary's, with its rigorous academic standards and large Hispanic enrollment, is a gateway to opportunities for many young people who otherwise might never reach their potential. In St. Mary's environment, many students are challenged for the first time in their educational experience. It is in this environment that their eyes are opened to their possibilities in a suddenly expanded world. It is in this environment that young Hispanics come to view themselves as legitimate members of the academic elite — not with arrogance, but with confidence born of accomplishment. Perhaps for the first time, a young person experiences the crystallization of the vaunted American dream: 'You can be anything you want to be.'"

Martinez: "I have been a special agent for nearly 12 years, and I have found it to be a very rewarding career that pushes my skills to the limit. I never dreamed that I would be doing and seeing the things that I have.

"After my wife, Diana, a 1981 graduate of Incarnate Word College, became a probation officer at the Bexar County Adult Probation Office, I began thinking of a career in law enforcement. In December 1983, I learned that the U.S. Secret Service was recruiting new agents.

"I passed the Treasury Department's law enforcement exam in January 1984 at the Federal Building in San Antonio, and after several interviews and an extensive background investigation I was hired. In 1989 I was transferred to the Washington, D.C., field office. A highlight of this assignment was an award for solving a murder case while investigating a suspected presidential threat.

"In 1992 I was assigned to the Vice-Presidential Detail, and three years later I was transferred to McAllen, Texas, where I work on a variety of Secret Service duties.

"My time at St. Mary's was memorable. I enjoyed the intimate community feeling pervading the campus. All my classes were relatively small, and the professors all accessible to help with problems. The instructor I most admired was sociology professor Brother Jerome Matz, S.M. He was tough, and always kept us on our toes, enabling me to achieve the discipline required to succeed.

"My father, Raymond S. Martinez (B.S. '59), is also a St. Mary's graduate."

Heroic Group

In the story, "The Three Musketeers," three swordsmen vow to protect the King of France to the death.

In the tapes of President Kennedy's assassination we saw for ourselves how Secret Service agents tried to shield Vice President Johnson, Mrs. Kennedy and Texas Gov. John Connally. President Johnson said of that traumatic experience: "There can be no more heroic act than offering your life to save another's."

Tony Chapa, Vic Erevia and Anthony Martinez, three modern musketeers in a dedicated American service, are loyal alumni proud to acknowledge St. Mary's role in their success. ■

In the story, "The Three Musketeers," three swordsmen vow to protect the King of France to the death.

Political Science History

Kenneth J. Carey, political science professor emeritus, has written a 1949-1985 history of that department.

In 1973 he was named Fellow by the Academic Council in recognition of his having co-founded, and co-chaired for 20 years, The St. Mary's Institute of International Relations and Public Affairs.

The work includes brief biographies of all political science (previously government) faculty, as well as the department's achievements, growth, approach to education, the happy times and the sad times. Copies may be obtained by sending a request and $1.50 for postage to Ken Carey, 229 Texas Avenue, San Antonio, TX 78228.

Highest Law Award

The Society of American Law Teachers awarded School of Law Dean Barbara Bader Aldave its top honor for a legal scholar who has made a "special contribution to the teaching mission of the legal academy."

Aldave was cited for a number of national and international programs, as well as for establishing legal outreach facilities that serve the indigent in San Antonio. Appointed to St. Mary's in 1989, she remains the only woman dean of a Texas law school.

New Development Director

Thomas B. Galvin has been appointed executive director of development.

Responsible for planning and implementing major gift programs and campaigns, he is a former vice president of resource development at United Way of San Antonio and Bexar County. He also held senior management positions with United Way in New York City and Philadelphia.

Marianist Heritage Awards

Charles Jenkins, facilities administrator of physical plant, and Ruth R. Rodgers, vice president, student development, are 1996 winners of Marianist Heritage Awards. The awards honor faculty, staff members, alumni or board of trustee members who embody the ideals of the Marianist family.

Student Leadership Awards went to Monica Gonzalez, third year law, and Donald R. Walker Jr., senior psychology major.

The Carl Fitzgerald Scholarship Award, established in 1986 to honor the memory of an outstanding student leader who died the summer before his senior year, went to Catherine L. White, junior biochemistry major.

Honored Faculty

The St. Mary's University Alumni Association honored the following at the 1996 Faculty Appreciation and Awards Dinner: Frederick Alvares, Ph.D., associate professor, biochemistry; Daniel Bjork, Ph.D., professor, history; Dana Cooper, Ph.D., assistant professor, counseling; Maureen Ebben, Ph.D., assistant professor, speech communication; Roberto Juarez Jr., professor, law; and Margaret Langford, Ph.D., assistant professor, management and marketing. Colleen Nolan, Ph.D., assistant professor, biology, received the 1996 Community Service Award.

Criteria for selection include consistently positive evaluation by students; demonstration of outstanding service to students; efforts toward instructional or professional improvement; work beyond the classroom in research and publishing; and service to the university or professional involvement in the community.

THIS YEAR'S MISS FIESTA – Posed here with Brother Cletus Behlmann's 1996 poster for the St. Mary's Alumni Association Fiesta Oyster Bake, is this year's Miss Fiesta San Antonio.

She's St. Mary's junior Monique Madero, selected by the pageant judges from 40 or so entries. Her winning performance, that must be in costume and depict famous Texas women, portrayed the first Texas woman governor of Texas -- the famed Miriam Amanda (Ma) Ferguson.

Monique's prizes include a $2,500 scholarship, presiding as a member of royalty at this year's fiesta events, and expense-paid visits to festivals throughout Texas and in several other states.

Students Win Court Decision

As the result of a case prepared by St. Mary's law students, an activist in the Democratic Revolutionary Party (PRD) became the first Mexican woman ever granted political asylum in the United States. Working under the supervision of Professor Monica Schurtman, the students prepared a case that substantiated claims of abuse.

Three other clinical programs in civil justice, community development and criminal justice also offer students hands-on experience, while providing needed legal services to homeless families, battered women, disabled children, inhabitants of death row and the elderly. More than 1,000 low-income men, women and children are assisted each year.

$49,000 Health Grant

A $49,000 planning grant from the National Institutes of Health puts St. Mary's in the running for up to $3 million to help faculty conduct biomedical research on campus and share projects with other institutions.

St. Mary's is one of some 30 institutions nationwide vying for funds available through the NIH's Research Infrastructure in Minority Institutions initiative, designed to help develop biomedical research at eligible minority-serving institutions. Five to seven grants of up to $600,000 a year for five years may be granted.

Fighting Irish

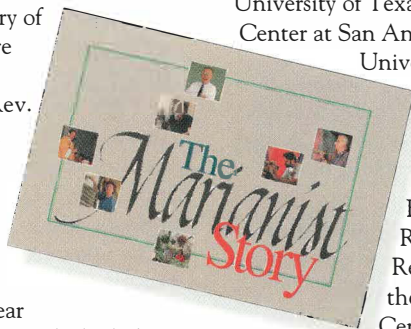

Marianist Brother Joe Barrett, S.M., center, welcomes St. Mary's first University of Notre Dame exchange students. Now counseling St. Mary's resident students and moderating the campus Christian Life Community group, he holds a 1968 master's degree in counseling from Notre Dame. Visiting students Claudia Hill and Christopher Brown are juniors majoring in accounting.

The Marianist Story Brochure

That's the name of a colorful (plenty of photos), well-prepared booklet on the history of the Marianists; where they are and what they're doing. The Rev. Jim Schimelpfening, S.M., assistant provincial for religious life for the St. Louis Province of the Marianists, spent more than a year producing the booklet with the help of the St. Mary's Public Relations professionals.

Free copies (as long as the supply lasts) may be obtained from the Marianist Vocation Ministry, One Camino Santa Maria, San Antonio, TX 78228-8556; phone (210) 431-2193; fax (210) 436-3724.

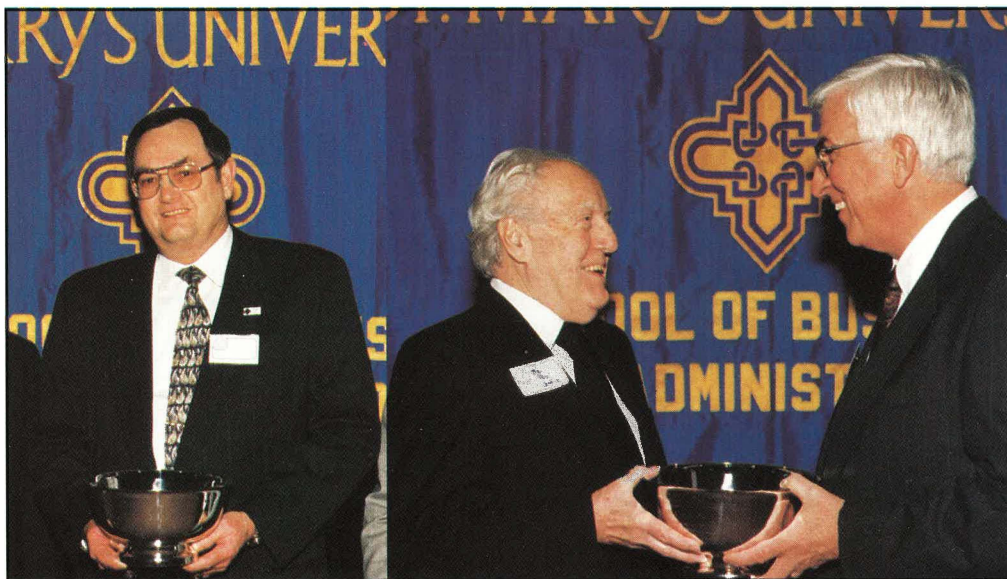

Research Consortium

St. Mary's recently joined a group of six institutions that constitute the Southwest Research Consortium, designed to foster appropriate joint programs. Other members are the University of Texas Health Science Center at San Antonio, the University of Texas at San Antonio, Trinity University, Southwest Foundation for Biomedical Research, Southwest Research Institute and the Human Systems Center at Brooks Air Force Base. St. Mary's membership in the consortium is expected to expand our faculty's professional credentials and expose them to new knowledge and developments in their fields of expertise.

BUSINESS ALUMS HONORED
Robert E. Sefcik (B.B.A. '59), left, senior vice president of Coca-Cola Bottling Co. of the Southwest, received the 1996 George B. Kohnen Award for distinction in management and leadership. The award honors the memory of the business school's first dean, the late Brother George Kohnen, S.M.
John L. Dieterle (B.B.A. '57), founder and president of Super S Foods, received the 1996 Paul C. Goelz Award for establishing growth in his business and for sharing his knowledge with aspiring entrepreneurs. The presenter is Brother Goelz, S.M., longtime dean of St. Mary's business school, now director of the St. Mary's Algur H. Meadows Center for Entrepreneurial Studies.

Foreign Enrollment Record

St. Mary's foreign enrollment reached an all-time high in 1995-96 with 165 students from 39 countries.

The leading countries of origin are Japan, 39; Mexico, 34; India, 22; Peru, 6; and Taiwan, 6.

Mexico used to be the No. 1 country of origin of St. Mary's foreign students, but that is no longer so, owing to that country's troubled economy, Barry E. Abrams, Ed.D., says. He is the university's vice president for enrollment management.

Men foreign students at St. Mary's outnumber women 102 to 63.

The most popular undergraduate programs for foreign students are business administration – 58 majors; engineering – 15 majors. Popular graduate programs are engineering – 15 majors, and business administration – 8.

Most foreign students' education is financed by their families. Four current students are sponsored by their country's government and five are receiving university scholarships.

New Board Member

Edward C. Benninger Jr., executive vice president of finance and administration of Valero Energy Corp., has been appointed to a two-year term on the university's board of trustees.

A certified public accountant directing his company's finance, administration and planning, he also is active in many community activities. A 1965 graduate of Texas Tech University, he last year was named a distinguished alumnus of that university.

Athletics Hall of Fame

Five of St. Mary's sports greats have been selected for this year's induction into the university's Athletics Hall of Fame. The three men selected for their baseball record are Danny Matocha (B.A. '65), Paul Szymarek (B.B.A. '80) and Mark Bond (B.A. '85). The two women, both cited for their softball performance, are Teresa Nuñez McAngus (B.A. '84) and Mary Kalinec (B.B.A. '86). It's the 13th year of the annual spring event that honors outstanding St. Mary's Rattlers and evokes a lot of memories and anecdotes.

St. Mary's law students help ready the new Center for Legal and Social Justice. They are, from left, Sophia Martinez, Ruben Duarte, Sharon Hannah, Steve Chiscano and Stacy Vancil.

In line with St. Mary's mission to extend service to society, the School of Law's new center opened Feb. 14 with dignitaries participating in a blessing ceremony.

Located near the campus in the renovated Our Lady of the Pillar Retreat Center leased from the Marianist sisters (Daughters of Mary Immaculate, U.S. Province), the center houses legal clinics that provide students with lawyering experience through free service to homeless people, battered women, disabled children, the elderly, death-row inmates, refugees and immigrants.

"The clinical programs for several years have been an outstanding example of our hands-on approach to the legal work for justice," says the Rev. John Moder, S.M., university president. "I am delighted that we are now able to provide a permanent home for this commitment, so that we can continue the Marianist mission at the Center for Legal and Social Justice."
